The sidebar on the left shows a project outline with sections like "Introduction", "Advanced Topics", "Front Matter", "Research", "Course Development", "Action Items / To-Dos", "SWWS Project Assets", "Course Resources to be Created", and "Course Assets / Standards".

Two pop-up windows are visible:

- Synopsis: A window showing a synopsis of the course overview, stating: "Provides overview of Scriptwriting with Scrivener course, what it contains and you as a student are expected to get from it. A great intro as Free Preview to see if you want to sign-up for the course or not."
- Compile: A window for exporting or printing the draft. It shows a table of contents with columns for "Include", "Title", "Pg Break Before", and "As-Is". The "As-Is" column is highlighted with a red box. The table lists various sections of the course, such as "Introduction", "Course Overview", "Why Me As Instructor?", "What You Need To Get Started", "Introduction To Scriptwriting", "What Is Scriptwriting?", "Differences Between Conventional W...", "Technical Conventions for Scriptwriting", "Scriptwriting Elements and Workflow", "Scriptwriting and Screenwriting Reso...", "Quiz On Scriptwriting Basics", "Creating and Writing Scripts with Scr...", "Configuring Scrivener for Scriptwriting", and "Script Types and Scrivener Templates".

Andy Ihnatko, technology I switched to Mac in 2009, primarily because I wanted to use Scrivener..) In the Scrivener walkthroughs and training courses I've accomplished, one of the nearly all common issues from new users can be that the interface is confusing and frustrating.. Don't worry, I was once the same But the more involved I became in the community, the rumblings got louder and the arguments became more insistent.
